WHAT'S ON IN LONDON

What to see and do in the Capital this February

↑
MUSICAL

Just For One Day

If you love '80s nostalgia, you'll love this new musical, which relives the day rock 'n' roll changed the world, AKA Live Aid. Written by John O'Farrell (Mrs Doubtfire, Something Rotten!) and directed by Luke Sheppard (@Juliet, The Little Big Things), and with songs by the original chart-toppers involved, it is guaranteed to be joyful. Plus, 10 per cent of ticket sales go directly to The Band Aid Charitable Trust. Until 30 March, The Old Vic, The Cut, SE1 (0744 871 7628; oldvictheatre.com)

Hadestown

Returning to the Capital five years after its sold-out run at the National Theatre is this multi award-winning musical that takes audiences on an unforgettable journey into the underworld. With two mythical, intertwining love stories at its heart, the production has been hailed as "a deeply resonant and defiantly hopeful theatrical experience". Not to be missed. From 10 February, Lyric Theatre, 29 Shaftesbury Avenue, W1D (uk.hadestown.com)

THEATRE

Dear Octopus

Lindsay Duncan takes on family matriarch Dora Randolph in this captivating revival of Dodie Smith's 1938 comedy, which follows a highly charged golden wedding anniversary reunion on the cusp of World War Two. A moving dissection of family life and of growing up, the production promises to be heart-breaking and hilarious in equal measure. 7 February-27 March, Lyttelton Theatre, National Theatre, Upper Ground, South Bank, SE1 (nationaltheatre.org.uk)

DANCE

INK

Step into the world of the hyper visual as Greek director, choreographer, and artist Dimitris Papaioannou takes over Sadler's Wells. Widely known as the creator of the opening and closing ceremonies of 2004's Olympic Games in Athens, you can expect the spectacular. With a background in painting, Papaioannou's work blurs the boundaries between theatre and experimental choreography, with some eye-popping visuals all part of the live performance. 8 February-2 March, Rosebery Avenue, EC1R (020 7863 8000; sadlerswells.com)

FAMILY DINING EXPERIENCE

The Roc King Club

A half-term treat that's decidedly not just for kids, this all-new immersive experience promises a three-hour adventure into a magical world. Centred around an interactive tournament, and hosted by the charismatic Arthur Chalice, you'll become knights around the table as you dine on a veritable feast. 10 & 11 February, Porchester Hall, Porchester Road, W2 (theroc-kingclub.com)
